Bikes on demand go any place, on campus or off

On-demand bike sharing – commonplace in major metropolitan areas – became a reality at Cornell April 14 at a ribbon-cutting ceremony outside Kennedy Hall, with about 50 onlookers eying the Zagster bikes gleaming bright white in the afternoon sun.

The Big Red Bikes program features a fleet of 32 bicycles, with five pick-up/drop off bike-rack stations on campus: at Balch Hall, Kennedy Hall, Stocking Hall and Grumman Squash Courts, and between Olin Library and Stimson Hall.

Anyone 18 years or older – Cornell students, faculty, and staff as well as visitors and community members – is welcome to join the bike-share program. The program will be maintained by Zagster, a national provider of bike-share programs for cities, universities, businesses and properties, in partnership with the Big Red Bikes student organization and Cornell's Transportation Services.

Anyone who joins the program can check out a bike and pay-as-they-ride at $3 per hour. Regular users can purchase a monthly or annual pass that allows an unlimited number of rides and the first hour of every ride is free. After the first hour, pass-holder rides cost $3 per hour.

Big Red Bikes received funding from the Student Assembly and Cornell Transportation Services to start the program. Once registered online, riders request a bike via the Zagster app or SMS text message, are sent a code to unlock a bike, ride it as they wish, and then drop the bike at any Zagster bike station.

Calling the new program both sustainable and convenient, Susan Powell of Transportation Services said it is a pilot, during which campus response will be measured.

Jung Won Kim '18, recently elected president of the Student Assembly (SA), said the program showcases the assembly's goals of increasing student engagement, involvement and leadership. Like the role of the SA in the formation of Anabel's Grocery, setting up the Big Red Bikes program was logistically challenging and its implementation impressive, he said.

Kim and six Big Red Bike committee members – Blanche Shao '19, Venus Dulani '19, Yorda Girmay '19, Erin Tou '18, Nicholas Kan '19 and Yabework Abebe '19 – did the ribbon-cutting, while other committee members set up bikes outside Olin Library.

“Our undergrads are investing in our infrastructure, in our transportation ... not just for their four years but beyond that,” said Gary Cremeens, manager of outreach and new media in Cornell's Transportation Services.

Fernando de Aragon, executive director of the Ithaca Tompkins County Transportation Council, noted that reducing the number of automobiles driven in the county depends on providing buses, car-share programs, bike lanes and trails – and bike shares. He and Vikki Armstrong, director of Bike Walk Tompkins, voiced their optimism about creating a safe walking and biking culture throughout the county. This program will be “a terrific asset to the university and eventually, I hope, it will move to the rest of the community,” de Aragon said.

Debra Howell elected to NYS ACE Women's Network

Debra Howell, director of information technology for the Division of Infrastructure, Properties and Planning (IPP), was elected to the executive board as the information officer for the New York State Chapter of the American Council on Education (ACE) Women's Network during their annual conference April 6-7 in Cooperstown, NY.

"I am honored to be invited to serve this organization and its goals of promoting the advancement, visibility and influence of women in higher education," Howell said.

Howell has been at Cornell for 18 years, all of them with IPP. She started her work at Cornell in desktop support and worked her way to her current director position. She obtained her master's degree in the School of Industrial and Labor Relations in 2006.

In her current role, Howell oversees desktop support, systems administration, programming services and building automated control systems integration. She is also the service group director for IPP, human resources, environmental health and safety, and Cornell University Police. She has led the development of the Information Technologies Career Framework at Cornell. In her times away from work, she is a master trainer for the U.S. Department of Defense and volunteers as an instructor for the U.S. Army Yellow Ribbon Program.

"Debra encourages everyone in her group to be the best they can be at what they do," said Kristi Cooley, IT support assistant for IPP. "I am amazed every day at the number of groups she is involved with, and that these groups do so much for the community and beyond. She also encourages all her staff members to grow and take every learning opportunity they can – even if that means leaving her organization. She is my mentor and my friend. I have never met a more genuine, inspiring and thoughtful person."

Tom Horton, assistant director of identity management and security engineering for CIT, said, "Debra is known for developing people. As a former direct report, I never before had such support and encouragement to take risks. She encourages all of her employees to find what drives them, and to strive towards that. She challenges her colleagues to be better people and to act on their potential. I have enjoyed a successful career — in no small part due to the support and guidance I received from Debra throughout my time working for her."

Speakers at the annual conference included Hartwick College President Margaret L. Drugovich and educator and researcher Judith Tabron, Ph.D., with State University of New York Chancellor Nancy L. Zimpher delivering the keynote address. Zimpher is the first woman to lead the nation's largest higher education system.

The ACE Women's Network is a national system of networks across all 50 states, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia, with the mission to advance and support women in higher education leadership roles. Members of the ACE Women's Network Executive Council serve as advisers to ACE's Inclusive Excellence Group, liaisons to the state networks, and mentors to state coordinators.

The Save the Day program

In February 2003, Cornell's then-junior goaltender Kyle Miller was diagnosed with a rare form of bone cancer. Despite his doctor's prognosis that he would not play collegiate lacrosse again, Miller made a triumphant return to the Big Red, seeing action in six games during the 2005 season. During the summer of 2003, while Miller was at home undergoing treatment, Ian Rosenberger '04 and David Pittard '04 decided to do something to support their teammate. The senior class chose to raise money to help children that were faced with chronic and critical illnesses. After teaming up with the Tompkins Trust Company and The Central New York Chapter of the Dream Factory, the Cornell lacrosse team founded the Save the Day fundraising program in the spring of 2004. This year's Clinic for a Cause will continue to support Cornell Lacrosse's fundraising effort for the Dream Factory.

Explore Tompkins' trails with ease with new website

Cornell Botanic Gardens and partner organizations have launched a new website designed to help outdoor enthusiasts find and take the perfect trail to walk, hike, bike, ski or even horseback ride. "Out on the Trails" at IthacaTrails.org is a GPS-enabled, mobile-optimized site that maps all of the trails in Tompkins County, and invites users to search by the experience they seek. Criteria include distance, difficulty, scenic views, wildlife viewing or picnicking, and also access directions to trailheads and information on parking.

"Our county boasts 240 miles of public trails, but since they span 15 different organizations, many residents and visitors find trail information in bits and pieces," says Todd Bittner, director of natural areas at the Cornell Botanic Gardens and one of the key grant managers. "The beauty of the new "Out on the Trails" website is that it provides comprehensive information on all the trails, regardless of ownership.”

The site links to each partner organization’s website for more information on the organization and its park or trail. With appealing descriptions, photographs and a clean user-friendly layout, the site is designed to encourage users to explore the County's outdoor recreation offerings more deeply.

The Cornell Botanic Gardens maintains 32 miles of trails through its natural areas. The Cayuga Trail, which spans from Fall Creek Gorge eastward, then circumnavigates its Monkey Run Natural Area, is a 10 mile-trail, maintained in partnership with the Cayuga Trails Club. “The website also leads you to hikes in some of our lesser known natural areas such as Edwards Lake Cliffs, Fischer Old-growth Forest, and Ellis Hollow Wetlands,” Bittner says..

The Cornell Botanic Gardens and its trail partners are offering hikes during the month of April to celebrate local trails and the launch of the new website. On April 23, the botanic gardens hosts an Earth Day Hike with the Cayuga Trails Club on the Cayuga Trail. And on April 29, Bittner will lead a hike in the Fischer Old-Growth Forest \(registration required\), the best of the few remaining examples of pre-European settlement forest in the region.

Additional April hikes by partner organizations include Roy H. Park Preserve; Cayuga Waterfront Trail; Black Diamond Trail; Stevenson Preserve; and Jim Schug Trail. Details available at IthacaEvents.com.

IthacaTrails.org is a partnership of the Tompkins County Parks and Trails Network. Partner organizations include the Cornell Botanic Gardens, Town of Ulysses, Tompkins County Tourism Program, Tompkins County Department of Planning and Sustainability , Ithaca Tompkins County Convention and Visitors Bureau, the Finger Lakes Land Trust, NY State Parks, the NYS Department of Environmental Conservation, Ithaca College Natural Lands, Cornell Lab of Ornithology, City of Ithaca, Town of Ithaca, Town of Lansing, Town of Dryden, Town of Danby, the Nature Conservancy, and user groups, including Bike Walk Tompkins, the Cayuga Trails Club, and Finger Lakes Trails Conference.
