Throughout 2004 CU Staff Displayed Impressive Energy, Style and Goodwill

In 2004 the Cornell box logo became an icon. The university’s Web site went from nearly dead to thriving, and its annual transnational enrollment topped 15,000. A quick overview:

- The Cornell Retirees Association kicked off their Sunshine series in March with President Lehman as the keynote speaker. Winter to Silica—what to do in your “open” time? A record number of more than 1,150 attendees engaged themselves at the SRC Harry Dickson Scotch Doubles Tournament in March.
- The 2004 George Peter Award for Dedicated Service recipients were honored for their work with the Cornell Retirees Volunteers in Service. More than 238 long-term volunteers participated in the downtown Relay for Life event held in July to help raise more than $20,000 for the American Cancer Society.
- The summer ended with the much-anticipated launch of the new Cornell Web site. The new Web site was the first of many steps to update the university’s public image.
- The “SOUPer” Day of Caring in early September kicked off the campaign of the United Way of Tompkins County. Cornell community members donated $13,000 in food gathered to benefit 15 area food pantries.
- This fall’s dinner will feature beef or vegetarian chili with three toppings of your choice, as well as bread, rolls, and dessert. Tickets are $5 each and available at the Staff Graduate Program office.

University Connects with Its International Student Community

In the wake of the disaster in South Asia, all members of the Cornell community of international students and scholars are being contacted by Brendan O’Brien, director, Office of International Students and Scholars (OISS). In his email O’Brien offered support services to any member of the Cornell community who experienced a loss as a result of the tsunami.

For more information or to make a donation, contact:

Tame Your In-box
Beth Goelzer Lyons

Are you getting overwhelmed by the number of messages on your computer? The first step to harnessing this power is to map out how you want your e-mail to be sorted. How? Through mailboxes and filters. Weeding out messages is a three-step process. First, you need to file messages in your filing system. Then, you need to consider how you want your mailboxes set up. Finally, you need to filter messages based on their content. But before you can file messages, you must first set up your mailboxes.

The first step is to identify where you want to store messages. For example, if you have a project due in two months, you might create a folder for that project. Once you have identified where you want to store messages, you can then create mailboxes to store them. Mailboxes are essentially folders that you can organize into a hierarchy. This allows you to easily find messages when you need them. To create a mailbox, simply right-click the folder you want to store messages in and select “New Mailbox.”

Once you have created your mailboxes, the next step is to organize messages into them. To move a message to a mailbox, simply click the “Move to Mailbox” button in the message window. This will open a list of your mailboxes, and you can select the one you want to store the message in. You can also create subfolders within your mailboxes to keep similar messages together.

Finally, you need to create filters to automatically sort messages based on their content. This is especially useful for messages that require immediate attention. For example, if you receive messages that require a response, you can set up a filter to automatically sort these messages to the top of your inbox. To create a filter, simply select the messages you want to filter, click the “Create Filter” button, and then select the criteria you want to use. The filter will automatically sort messages based on the criteria you specified.

By following these three steps, you can significantly reduce the amount of time you spend organizing your e-mail. This will allow you to focus on the messages that matter most to you.
