Cornell United Way Goes Over the Top
Despite challenges, campaign raises $600,000

About 40 people gathered in the Hall of Fame room in Schoellkopf Hall, February 28, to help the Cornell United Way campaign celebrate a big announcement.

Carolyn Ainslie, vice president for budget and planning, and Cornell United Way campaign chair, enthusiastically announced that the 2002 campaign had raised $600,000, exceeding its goal of $560,000 set last fall. President Harrison Rawlings congratulated the assembled crowd and expressed appreciation for the support of the Cornell campus.

In thanking the university community, Ainslie explained, “The Cornell campus community came together in an extraordinary outpouring of caring. These difficult and trying economic times make the United Way’s work to support our local nonprofit agencies even more critical to our communities.”

Outstanding efforts
The United Way campaign depends heavily on the energy of more than two dozen staff volunteers, dubbed “dramas deputies,” who carry out the work of the individual college or unit level. Dramas deputies, particularly strong in giving more area’s participation, demonstrated an excellent giving rate in giving. Spearheading their effort was Cornell University dean, administrative assistant Janice Miles.

The United Way campaign chair, and John Alexander, county executive director of Tompkins County United Way this year. Spearheading overall giving rate of 50%. The Law School, that year, had its effort was doubled.

Despite challenges, campaign raises $600,000.

One Colorful Character!

With the 2-1 defeat of Princeton on February 28 and the 3-1 defeat of Yale on March 3, Cornell eased into first place in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) standings with a record of 17-2-1. Cornell is the number 1 seed heading into playoffs with a first round bye.

And Cornell’s hockey fans are thrilled. Hoping to whip up all that enthusiasm is Dave Nulle, the famed “Zamboni driver,” whose colorful and outrageous costumes are a highlight of home game intermissions. Ice must be in Nulle’s blood as his father played on the Cornell hockey team in the 30s.

Nulle takes his status as the Zamboni man more accurately a “ice resurfacing technician.” Since Cornell has not used a Zamboni machine to groom the ice since 1982, quite seriously. A Union shopper, Nulle inhabits vintage clothing drops in New York City to find just the right item to help him transform himself into a bull fighter, a bishop or maybe even Elvis John.

A mild-mannered man, Nulle describes his job as first “glitter, glory, glamour” then after the game as “grunge, grass and garbage.” The Cornell hockey team will return the ice in the play-offs later in March against an opponent yet-to-be-determined.
D uring a recent talk I stumbled onto a fantastic field at a campus site. I often consider myself a bear hugger because I love bears, and I take it to mean about who I was and what I believe. I often find myself poking at everything that I find, and I find myself poking at all of the different communities. I often find myself poking at all of the different communities.

In the last few years I've been working with bears, and I've been poking at everything that I find, and I find myself poking at all of the different communities. I often find myself poking at all of the different communities.

I think that because it is easier to remember days gone by than to try to keep up with the current events, I often find myself poking at everything that I find, and I find myself poking at all of the different communities.
